

I would like to urge the commission NOT to allow the CBA to impose the Federal Governments established business relationship exemption to circumvent Indiana's no call law. While it is true that Americans choose which financial institutions to do business with, it really isn't a business relationship for most of us, rather a necessity to go about our daily lives. Not unlike a grocery store or a gas station. I urge you to deny them their desire to once again invade my home with their unwanted phone calls. Rather, encourage the CBA to have their members mail/email sign up forms to their customers and ask us whether or not we would give them permission to solicit us.

Sincerely, Walter Dunivan
